CHAPTER XII. TRE WOMAN IN BLACK. Time passed pleasantly enough at Bromle House. The gentlenien made themselves but useful and agreeable, instituting pionies, garden parties, and riding excursions, which kept th young people in a continuous gound of marriment. And Dora entered into the guieties. which were novel to her, with youthful zest and she look care that her home letters dwel on the happy present—the pust was generally left out; and, concerning Stone she never men tioned his name, for although there was inucl about him that she did not like, she considered that hitherto she had entertained opinions which to some extent seemed unfair and without sufficient foundation; and that he had thus been misrepresented to her through her own unbridled and imaginative ideas. And Stone spared he pains in establishing his own good reputation with the ladies, especially with Dora, for he would have gladly forfeited all other good estimates in order to have thoroughly secured hers. As it was in tion that Rose and May were wont to feel slighten and joulous, and this eventually led to unpleasantness. But everything went on placedly for some weeks. At last the trouble came. together in a shady summer house when the her mind, said foolishly-

I feel very miserable sometimes-but do tell me !- has he ever spoken of me to, you ?-has he mentioned to you anything concerning our-our friendship?"

Dora smiled a little and tried to recollect an instance when he had. "Well, May, I think he has, once or twice mentioned your name and also your sister's—not about anything particular, though," she answered candidly; and then seeing her consin's face grow flushed and angry, she added, "But surely you do not attribute any importance to such is cidents or allow such trivial matters to mar your happiness, or cause dies naion."

" Mar my happiness! No-the idea of such a thing!" she oried derisively, and then added rather eagerly. " but has he ever spoken aboutspoken, well, endearingly to you—has he?" There was a demure smile about Dora's lips when she answered-"No. dear, and if he bal I should have probably forgotten about it ere this, it would not be, to me, a pleasant thing to remember. But

"Well, you certainly do say some strange things," remarked Dora: "in what manner have I provoked you ?" "Provoked me!" repeated May. "I do no care! Not I-I hate the man," And with these words she burst into angry tears and went out of the summer-house, leaving Dova aione and perplexed. But she was not left to herself very long, for Stone, who had been a silent witness to all that had transpired, emerged from the bushes and appeared on the so-ne, feigning much surprise and pleasure at seeing Dora. " Dear Miss Evans," he began, looking even more surprised and much concerned, " pray tell me what causes you to look so unhappy; can be of any help to you?" "Thank you-no. Mr. Stone-I am rarely unhappy when alone.'

THE INDIAN BUDGET AND THE IMPORT ALLAHABAD, 2nd March. In introducing his measure Sir J. Westland said :- We are face to face with a deficit, all told of 3! crorss, which is wholly due to the date rioration of the position caused by the fall of exchange during the last two or three years. It is hopoless to attempt to meet this position with out increasing our revenues, and Government have anxiously considered the best way in which they might sook for that increase. They ar aided in this matter by the deliberations of the Herschell Committee, who enquired into the possibilities of further taxation in Andia, and passed in review all the sources of revenue sage gested to them, with the opinion that a r vival of the import duties is the bast means of recovery or partial recovery open to us. The Government of India thoroughly conours that the measure opens to us not only additional love nue but an additional source of revenue, and our present position is unfortunately such that we cannot with any certainty claim finality for our more thin. The legardary regiment that was said to be all colonels is almost rivalled by some ragiments of the Spanish army. In the little expeditionary force ander Marshal Campos at Melillo, there are said to be no fewer than 27 generals and 70 colonels. In Spain this is not thought at all remarkable, for the commissioned officers are really not much less numerous than the noncommissioned officers and privates put logether. According to a Spanish army list, the number of generals in Spain is 203 of colonels 534 lieuteneut colonels 962, of majors 2,014, of pap toins 5,242, of lieutenshite 7,576, and of sub lieutenunta 9.869. This gives a total of 29.400 officers out of an army which, on the peace foot 11 d. C. Bakers ing, numbers only 75 000 men.
